

Kiswahili Writer/Media Designer

JUNTOS is seeking an experienced Kiswahili writer to help us design new products for the East African market.

JUNTOS works with banks and other financial institutions to help more people gain access to financial services. JUNTOS achieves this through customized, interactive text message experiences tailored to low-income and underserved groups.

The writer will work to craft JUNTOS text messages that speak to different cultures within East Africa, connecting with thousands of people directly through their mobile phones.

Our ideal candidate has:

- an outstanding command of the Kiswahili language and culture
- a love of human-centered design thinking
- a desire to do something important in the world.

This position works closely with the JUNTOS team, searching for new ways to make people's lives better by uncovering opportunities for increased communication and financial success. Our team combines empathy-driven design with a technology platform that lets us learn and iterate at speeds the financial service industry never thought possible.

We are currently looking for applicants with native cultural and language fluency in Kiswahili, professional-level English, a degree from a four-year university, and an obvious passion for words, nuance, and communication. If what you read here speaks to you, even if you're interested in a different language or region, please contact us! We're growing quickly in many places.

Examples of potential candidates would be a socially-minded writer or journalist, excited to use her finely-honed skills for a world-changing purpose, or a researcher in economics or anthropology with excellent, practiced interview skills, and deep experience working in a Swahili-speaking country.

Juntos is venture backed by Aligned Partners and Omidyar Network and headquartered in San Carlos, California. To apply, please send a resume and cover letter to [join.the.team \[at\] ahorrandojuntos.com](mailto:join.the.team@ahorrandojuntos.com)
