

If that is right, however, then the way the probe question is worded—which is, in relevant respects, exactly how MMN&S’s probe question is worded—cannot force the question to be understood as being about the expression qua type rather than as being about uses of that expression. If the question is heard as being about what the phrase “the baseball player who lives at Laughing Pines” denotes, taken literally in the language Grace intends to be speaking, then the only reasonable answer is that it denotes Lily.

If that is right, however, then the way the probe question is worded—which is, in relevant respects, exactly how MMN&S’s probe question is worded—cannot force the question to be understood as being about the expression qua type rather than as being about uses of that expression. If the question is heard as being about what the phrase “the baseball player who lives at Laughing Pines” denotes, taken literally in the language Grace intends to be speaking, then the only reasonable answer is that it denotes Lily.